HOSSZÚ AZ ÚT A TRÓNIG, BÉBI & A KORONA HATALMA — Brett Shaw III — Hosszú az út a trónig, bébi · A Korona hatalma · Aranypiramis

The Brett Shaw Sci-Fi Cycle · Book IV — The El-Nath Star-Detonation, the 0 °C Throne Room & The Two Dragon Princesses.

Nobody blows up a star by accident, and the Imperial Admiralty at El-Nath (`2665`) was not in the mood for philosophical nuances. When the binary core of El-Nath went critical during a covert interception, Brett Shaw had two choices: let the shockfront sterilize three inhabited sectors, or trigger an inward stellar collapse that vaporized an entire imperial battle-group along with the threat.

He pulled the trigger, survived in a shattered escape pod, and was brought back in irons to face a death sentence.

He never reached the execution dock. High above the tribunal, in the beryllium-agate throne room where the air was held at a perpetual zero degrees Celsius to drink ambient magic into stillness, Emperor IV. von Anstetten — wearing his simple dark headband rather than the heavy imperial crown — signed a single line. To the court, it was an inexplicable sovereign pardon. Within the Anstetten-család, it was a father refusing to execute his own illegitimate half-human, half-Megaira dragon son.

The distance between the early Dominate of `I.` and `II. von Anstetten` — who had banned esoteric knowledge and ruled through iron terror after 2405 — and the quiet equilibrium of `IV. von Anstetten` was measured in the Emperor's two daughters.

During the Willis-Moon solar-sail regatta between Earth and Mars, when saboteurs blew the stabilizing rings off the royal yachts, Brett dove through hard vacuum to pull both princesses out of the spinning debris. Gwandolyn, the younger sister, looked at human beings the way the old Dominate did: as fragile, short-lived clay beneath the water-element dragon bloodline.

Caroline-Blindamoor, the older sister, looked at Brett with eyes that remembered their childhood corridors in the Space Palace. Court etiquette forbade any subject from seeing her bronze-red hair unpinned; behind that veil, her true Megaira form was a golden winged giant cobra-dragon (aranyszínű, szárnyas óriáskobra) stored across the dimensional membrane.

— My father wears a headband because a crown makes you forget the weight of the people underneath it, Caroline told Brett quietly in the recovery bay after Willis-Moon. If the throne ever falls to me, bátyám, I will not rule over corpses.
